Mr. Siegel,

I have reviewed available municipal records for the subject Property. A property record card dated April 2, 1975 shows A business office and two apartments. There was a Certificate Of Occupancy issued for a new owner issued on July 12, 1996 With a description of use as business with two apartments.

In April of 2006 the zoning officer signed off for a permit that Was issued by the building department to remodel two apartments,

A certificate of occupancy of which was issued for said work on November 28, 2006.

It appears the apartments have existed in the building for at least since

1975 and have been rendered non-conforming uses because the current

Ordinance does not permit residential uses in the C Commercial Zone.

Feel free to contact me with any other questions.

Dear Mr. Merlino:

In accordance with our conversation of today, it is my understanding that when my clients' purchased the above reference property and applied for a permit for use of two apartments and same was given a certificate of occupancy after the work was completed, you advised me that under Hillsdale zoning this is now considered a legal non-conforming use which cannot be changed.

Kindly confirm he above in writing.

Thanking you in advance.
